A Rock Island freight train was robbed of 45 cases of cigarettes last Friday morning. The train had taken a sidetrack at Mokena about 2 a. m., and it is thought that while the train was standing on the side track, thieves broke into a freight car and after the train pulled out 45 cases of cigarettes were tossed out of the car 2 miles west of Mokena and hauled away. One carton of cigarettes was overlooked by the thieves and was found alongside of a very little used road running on a parallel with the railroad. The value of the merchandise stolen is placed at $2880.

Mokena School Board Given Clean Bill

Mokena, Illinois, May 1, 1931
Editor News-Bulletin:

In view of the many rumors circulating throughout our Village regarding expenditures and financial condition of our School District, I requested, and secured, the opportunity of viewing all financial records of this district, Thursday evening.

All members of the board, as well as Mr. Hensel, were present, and all facilities were afforded me in my investigation of such records, which were in accord with previously filed and certified records now in possession of other authorities.

It gives me real pleasure to state that there is not a single questionable item in the records; each entry is clearly made, vouchers supporting expenditures are in proper condition, and, in my opinion, these records are nearly model in their present condition.

The courtesy afforded me by the Directors is appreciated; the evident painstaking effort to conduct the financial affairs of our District is commendable.

It will be of real benefit to our community if the facts as above outlined are communicated either in your paper or otherwise to those who are of the opinion that our Directors have, in any way, been negligent in the handling of our School affairs, or profited, personally, from such.

Cordially,
FRANK A. TOOLEY

Worth Wins Four Straight

BEATS PALOS PARK 16 to 11
By Carl Bodin

The Worth Baseball club added its fourth successive victory to its string in as many starts last Sunday, May 3rd, Palos Park being the seemingly willing victim of a frenzied contest at the Worth ball grounds that could well have been labeled a baseball version of Shakespeare's "Comedy of Errors".

Palos Park opened the game with two unearned hits off Pitcher Miller via errors and overthrows of fielders Rolfe and Lucas, that later were converted into a two run lead in the first inning and manager Peterson grew fidgety although seven innings remained to be played and this the day of the lively ball and big scores in major leagues. Palos was blanked in opening the third bracket and Worth then began the subsequent 16 to 11 massacre when Ed. Bodin sent a screaming smash thru short with one on base that went for a two base hit and drove in the initial marker.

Failure to support pretty fair pitching on the part of both sides contributed to a debacle of hectic baseball and the consequent delirious scoring made the "writing on the wall" read Palos 10, Worth 8, to finish the 6th frame.

In the 7th a questionable change in pitchers by Palos resulted in Worth nipping Perkins for a total of 8 intoxicated runs in one inning in which every Palos player figured at least one "Hooligan" play. The game ended Worth 16, Palos 11, a notable example and a glorious tribute to the frenzied lunacy of frantic amateur managers or rather we should say mis-managers who lose sight of the fact that even Philadelphia can't win them all and that 3 in a row is a headliner and four is a miracle; that five successive victories is stupendous and six calls for a "Bromo-Seltzer".

But notwithstanding, it was good entertainment and enjoyed immensely by a motley audience of about 400 enraptured souls who cheered and groaned as fortune's golden feather flicked, fluttered and wavered in so maddening a manner, that to the casual and unbiased observer it seemed their simple breasts must burst with the apparent great violence of the emotions aroused therein.

Little Buds Celebrate Mothers Day

Saturday afternoon, May 2nd, 1931 will live in the memory of the Garden Buds of Tinley Park for a long, long time. The Saenger Hall was turned into a regular scene of fairyland.

All the little Garden Buds were there as happy as could be and the mothers who did accept the invitation were there with smiling faces. The stage was lined with a border of over 200 Jonquills that the Garden Buds made, as a secret surprise for their mothers.

Mrs. R. J. Hug greeted the Garden Buds explaining it was the happiest day of her life.

Next a most hearty welcome was extended to the mothers and the officers of the club were introduced. Mrs. Hug introduced her mother who came from Chicago to attend this lovely party. Mrs. Charles Damke expressed her delight at being present.

At this time Mrs. Florence Anderson was introduced. She is serving as instructor and well may she be praised for the time and work she is devoting to this club.

Mrs. Florence Anderson introduced her mother, Mrs. Eleanor Bjovik and then Mrs. Anderson gave a lovely outline of the activities and pleasures of the club from the start to the present time.

This was appreciated very much by all those present.

One Killed In Wabash R. R. Wreck

One man was killed and another was believed to have been burned to death Wednesday night when 2 freight trains on the Wabash Railroad collided in Chicago Ridge, the next station north of Worth.

The dead man was Matthew E. O'Heir of 7927 S. Vernon av., Chicago, an engineer.

Trainmen and volunteers worked at a late hour to extricate a fireman, believed to be F. S. Crew of 7057 S. Eggleston av., trapped under the wreckage of one of the locomotives.

As flames and steam shot from this locomotive when it overturned there was little hope that he would be found alive.

The collision impact was so terrific that the crash was heard for blocks.

Police Chief Charles Polchow of Chicago Ridge heard the crash in the police station several blocks away and organized a group of citizens to rush to the scene.

Meanwhile a wrecking crew left the Chicago terminal of the Wabash railroad to assist in the rescue work.

Eighteen cars of one of the trains were hurled into the ditch. Telephone and telegraph poles nearby were crushed to the ground and wires broken.

Early reports said that the wreck occurred when the engine of a train northbound, traveling at considerable speed, sideswiped the locomotive of a southbound train as the latter was on a switching track.

Among these are automobile investigators and highway police of the office of the secretary of state, employees of the state library in all divisions, state highway maintenance police and many employees of the division of highways, employees of the legislative reference bureau except secretary, and numerous other employees.

At a meeting of 163 state employees, mostly from various institutions throughout the state, held in Springfield, the State Employees' Pension association was organized to work with Representative Frank A. Warden Henry Hill, of Joliet prison, has expressed to the legislative investigating committee the opinion that prisons should not be so large and recommended closer supervision of prisoners, provision of more work for the convicts on products that can be utilized at the prisons, more deputy wardens, increased pay for the guards and better training facilities.

The White House conference on Child Health and Protection held in Washington last November has recently published its reports. That volume as well as many others are available for loan to individuals or clubs by the Library Extension Division, Springfield. Other useful books are: Aldrich, Cultivating the Child's Appetite; Blatz, Parents and the Pre-School Child; Groves, Wholesome Childhood; Hutchinson, We and Our Children; Lucas, Health of the Run-About-Child; Rand, Growth and Development of the Young Child; Shaw, the Young Child's Health; Terman, Hygiene of the School Children.

Awarding of ten highway contracts recently by the state highway division brought the total of work put under contract this year to more than $7,500,000, including the cost of cement. With the 1931 contracts added to those carried over from 1930, the department has more than $18,000,000 worth of road work for this year. The 1931 program calls for the expenditure of approximately $45,000,000 for road construction and is to be the biggest year in the history of the division.

Sixteen hundred acres of timber and farm lands in the vicinity of Belleville, Ill., have been leased for a state game preserve as announced by Ralph F. Bradford, director of the department of conservation. This land has ideal cover for game birds and will be used to replenish the state's supply of quail and pheasants. According to contract made with the individual farmers whose land comprise this tract, two acres out of every 160 will be sown to feed for the birds. The tract will be posted against hunting and the welfare of the young quail and pheasant will be watched by state game wardens and the farmers who have leased their land. The Belleville high school class in agriculture and the Boy Scouts of the city are to raise part of the pheasant to be loosed on the tract, the eggs to be supplied by the state and they will be paid $2.50 for each bird that is released by them.

The University of Illinois is contributing annually $100,000,000 to the welfare of the state and nation, a new bulletin of the university reveals. This amounts to more than sixteen times the annual cost of maintenance and operation. The bulletin states that saving in one agricultural project alone amounts to $29,000,000 annually, and that a prominent industrialist has said that "one research project in engineering means 'ten millions of dollars annually in the Chicago area alone.'" It is impossible in most instances to interpret in dollars and cents the value of the university's research contributions, but many millions of dollars are annually given back to the state in the form of returns for its investment in this institution.

The $25,000 subscription race has been tendered the state fair management for this year by a group of race horse owners who have pledged to nominate their eligible starters. The classic is deemed the greatest racing race run annually on any American track. If enough enroll at $1,000 for each entry the management will assume charge of the event. W. O. This race was formerly run at Kalamazoo, Mich., but that organization has decided to discontinue it.

The state industrial commission reports that while factory operations continued to expand in most of the reporting cities of the state during the period February 15 to March 15, several industrial centers, notably Chicago, registered substantial declines. An increasing volume of outdoor construction work aided in relieving the existing unemployment situation. Reports from the free employment offices of the state reflect a general decline in ratio of applicants for work to positions available.

Star of My Life

Here I breathed the breath of life,
Your prayers, like rays of heavenly light,
Illumed safe paths for me to tread,
To point my ways in places bright.
Through childhood days of helplessness
And mystery, strange pain and tears
You led me ever from the depths
Of joyless hours from needs or fears.

Star of my life—
My Mother.
New interests with added years
Have come, but none that does imbue
With greater faith than your sure love;
No orb that gleams more brightly through
The clouds that float across my view
To peace and happiness and God,
To guide, to comfort, to sustain,
As life's uneven course I plod.

Star of my life—
My Mother.
I know 'tis not without distress
You've kept your light before my feet,
Oft-times I've followed errant bent
And brought you grief and sore defeat.
But your true life and patient love
Have e'er kept plain the surer way.
Though I fall short, you have not failed;
For this I honor you today.

Star of my life—
My Mother.

Day Held Sacred to Mother Love

Every year, on the second Sunday in May, we American people pay tribute to the mothers of the nation. On that Sunday we offer up prayers and give thanks for the sacrificing and self-denying love of all good mothers. We make formal recognition of maternity with its great love, born of God and less only than his great love for his children, that guards, protects and defends all childhood even at the greatest price, that of life itself. On this day we take time to show to our mothers by outward signs and visible tokens our appreciation of her watchful and loving care of us through all the years. For a little while we bring to view the treasures of memory buried deep in our hearts. Lucile Day writes, in the Indianapolis Star.

This beautiful custom is of comparatively recent origin although many profess to see its source in an old custom of the British isles. There grew up the custom of the sons and daughters who were away from home going to spend the day with the parents and especially the mother on the mid-Sunday of Lent. Usually they took with them some little trinket or gift as a token of their love. Doubtless, this custom soothed the heart of many a parent aching at the first flight of the boy or girl from the home nest. There, as the emphasis became placed more and more upon reverencing the mother, the mid-Sunday of Lent became known as Mothering Sunday.

The United States observed no such day until the influence of a remarkable woman and her daughter became the leaven that finally brought about the universal and national observance of Mother's day. The first observance of a special church service honoring all mothers was so successful that ministers and governing bodies of churches of all denominations in all parts of the country began to urge the adoption and national observance of a universal Mother's day.

Since May 8, 1914, there has been national and governmental recognition of the second Sunday of May as Mother's day. On that day congress, by joint resolution, asked President Wilson to issue a proclamation designating the second Sunday of May as Mother's day. The President lost no time in complying with the request, signing the bill the same day and issuing the proclamation the next.

It is interesting to note that Woodrow Wilson deemed mothers worthy of the same recognition as the greatest of our national heroes. In his proclamation he directed the government officials to display the United States flag on all government buildings on this day and invited the people to display the flag at their homes or other suitable places as a public expression of love and reverence for the mothers of this country.

Special Church Program.

The observance of Mother's day is marked by deep spirituality in churches. Special programs are arranged at which mothers are guests of honor. Pastors preach appropriate sermons. The music is selected with reference to its suitability for the occasion. In some places each member of the congregation makes himself responsible for the attendance at the service of a mother, his or her own, if possible. A flower is pinned onto each mother present and often by her own child. A beautiful custom of some churches is the flower salute at the close of the service. At a given signal the flowers are held aloft while a benediction is pronounced upon all mothers.

The first call of the churches to observe Mother's day was directed particularly to the men and especially to "the wandering boy." Every man who was absent from his mother upon this day was urged to write his mother a letter some time on that day and, if dead, to wear a white carnation in her memory. At first a very determined effort was made to make the carnation the flower of the day. A red carnation was worn if the mother was alive and a white one if dead.

All Flowers Appropriate.

Floists have frowned heavily upon this idea and directed their energies against it. They say that carnations are really the favorite flowers of but few, that they can not afford to raise carnations in such large quantities to supply the demand of but a single day and if they would the price they would have to ask would be prohibitive to the average pocketbook.

The use of whatever flowers are blooming profusely at the time has become customary, usually peonies and roses. Potted plants as gifts of the day enjoy a huge popularity, being a source of longer enjoyment than cut flowers.

So the second Sunday of May has come to be a time of going home, of sending a telegram with love, of writing a letter, and of giving a gift to our best friend on earth, mother. But most of all, it means a stopping in the hurry and scurry of our modern life to take increased devotion to our mothers.

THE PARABLE OF THE POUNDS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 19:11-26.
GOLDEN TEXT—Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Teaches Us to Do Our Best.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Teaches Us to Do Our Best.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Partners With Jesus.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Stewardship of Money.

The purpose of this parable was to correct the misapprehension of the disciples as to the immediate establishment of the kingdom. They were on the way to Jerusalem, and the disciples thought that immediately upon their arrival there Jesus would begin the exercise of his kingdom rule. Christ taught the disciples the reality of his coming and the setting up of a real kingdom, but indicated that there would be a long delay after his ascension before he would return.

I. The Absent Nobleman (v. 12).
Going away to receive a kingdom was a common occurrence among the Jews. Members of the Herodian family had gone to Rome and secured their appointment to rule over Palestine. This pictures Jesus going back to God to receive his kingdom. Jesus ascended on high to receive from God the Father a kingdom. He will return when the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. Though the time of his return be unknown, and even delayed, let no one mistake the certainty of his coming.

II. The Distribution of the Pounds (v. 13).

These pounds represent Christ's gifts to his servants. When Christ ascended he gave gifts to men (Ephesians 4:7-12). To each servant was given the same amount, showing that to all a certain gift had been given and therefore all will be held responsible for its use. The distribution was made by the sovereign. The servants did not choose as to whether they would have a gift at all, or even its amount. It was also a purposeful distribution. They were to put their gifts to use during his absence. What the nobleman demanded was faithfulness.

III. The Rebellious Citizens (v. 14).
They hated him and sent messengers after him, notifying him of their refusal to be subject to him. This pictures the unbelief of the Jews after Christ's ascension, and their repudiation of his rule. It also pictures the unbelieving world in its hatred and rejection of Christ.

IV. The Accounting (vv. 15-27).

1. Its certainty (v. 15).
Christ will surely bring every one to account for the use made of his gifts. Men may go on in proud unbelief and rebellion, but God never forgets. He has appointed a day in which he will judge the world (Acts 17:31).

2. The time (v. 15).

It will take place when Jesus comes back to the earth. His return will take place when he has received his kingdom. He will receive his kingdom when he asks the Father (Ps. 2:8). His delay in asking the Father for his kingdom is because of his long suffering mercy, extending grace to as many as will receive him as Savior.

3. Rewards given for faithfulness (vv. 16-19).

(1) The first report (vv. 16, 17).
He did not say, "I have made ten pounds," but "Thy pound hath gained ten pounds." He recognized the Lord's ownership. To this the Lord replied by commendation. He praised him and promoted him, making him ruler over ten cities.

(2) The second report (vv. 18, 19).
In this case the pound had gained five pounds. He did not get the Lord's commendation for he had not done so well, but was appointed to a place of rulership over five cities. The reward in each case was proportioned to faithfulness during the Lord's absence.

4. Judgment upon the unfaithful (vv. 20-27).

(1) His report (vv. 20, 21).

This report was entirely bad. He had not put the pound to use but laid it away, throwing the blame upon the Lord. He asserted that the character of the Lord was such as to produce fear.

(2) Condemnation (vv. 22, 23).

The wicked servant is judged out of his own mouth. His excuse increased his guilt. He is called wicked. To fail to use our opportunities to serve Christ is the basest wickedness.

(3) Stripped of the pound (vv. 24-26).

To fail to use one's gifts means to lose them. One of the losses of the next world will be the deprivation of what we now have.

Must Battle With Evil

Evil never surrenders its hold without a sore fight. We never pass into any spiritual inheritance through the delightful exercises of a picnic, but always through the grim contentions of the battlefield. Every faculty which wins its spiritual freedom does so at the price of blood.—J. H. Jowett.

Universal Language May

Tend to Curb Divorce

More than usual interest is attached to Minnesota's first wedding in Esperanto, the universal language invented by Idealists who seek to unite mankind with one tongue which all peoples of the world may learn to speak and understand.

Perhaps the resort to the international language in the exchange of marriage vows presents a long-looked for solution of the divorce problem. The ease with which the contracting parties may take the vows is said to be one of the chief causes of unsuccessful marriages. Here Esperanto offers a solution. Instead of the English "I do," which is very easy to say when the pastor propounds his "Do you?" the contracting parties wedded in Esperanto will be forced to reply, "Tion me faras." A lot of prospective brides and grooms will never leap that hazard to matrimony and many a marriage which might find its way into the divorce courts will be wrecked on Esperanto difficulties.

If the happy couple did succeed in hurdling this barrier the perpetuity of the union would be virtually certain if the newlyweds were to be restricted to conversation in Esperanto for the first year. If the usual spats brought the usual results and the tearful bride made ready to leave, in order to voice the customary "I'm going home to mother!" she would have to say, "Mi viveco helmoa por patrino." And rather than that most unhappy wives would put up with the worst of husbands. In Esperanto may lie the remedy for our 201,475 divorces a year.—St. Paul Dispatch.

Holland's Changed Conditions

In the past 50 years a great change has taken place in Holland with respect to its agricultural status. Formerly it was an importer of dairy products, but a little more than a generation ago the farmers of that country became interested in modern machinery, the use of which became popular at once and the entire situation was changed so that at the present time the country takes care of its own consumption and in addition a great deal of this material is shipped abroad.

Fellow Artists

Fritz Kreisler tells an amusing story of a visit he paid when in London the other day. His hostess, after telling him that her little girl loved music and was learning the violin, sent for the child in order to introduce her to the great violinist. Kreisler, who adores children, was charming, and said: "I hear you are having violin lessons?" "Yes," was the answer, "and mother tells me you, too, play!"—London Passing Show.

Several people have told the pastor that they feel the church services are so worth while that they are resolving to go every Sunday. Why do they feel that way? Here is the reason: the pastor, in the church services, is trying to make religion a real and natural experience. To those who believe in the principles of religion, they will find their biggest inspiration at the church.

"That's Gratitude"

Playing in Chicago

Linking the names of John Golden and Frank Craven, "That's Gratitude" has come to Chicago to duplicate its sensational success in New York and for the past five weeks it has tested the capacity of the Blackstone theatre, now under the management of Tracy C. Drake. George W. Barbier and Thomas W. Ross head the cast, which includes the same players who appeared for seven months at the John Golden theatre, New York. Mr. Barbier has just signed a $200,000 picture contract and audiences who see him in "That's Gratitude" will recognize him in Maurice Chevalier's next picture, "The Smiling Lieutenant" and many others in which he will appear during his five years' contract with Paramount.

Like Frank Craven's earlier success, "The First Year", "That's Gratitude" deals with human frailty as it is to be found in the average American family. Tom Maxwell, (Mr. Barbier), a jovial traveling man from Hutchinson, Kan., lies groaning in a small Iowa hotel, from the effects of tainted food when he is befriended by Bb Grant, (Mr. Ross), manager of a one-night-stand musical show. The pair wax mellow and affectionate over a bottle of prescription rye and when Grant's show goes on the rocks a few weeks later he moves in on the Maxwell's at Hutchinson. Grant outwears his welcome and upsets the whole routine of the household but not until he has started an unhappy and unattractive girl on her way to a musical career.

How Grant "promotes" the girl's fiancé for $7,000—enough to put another road show with her in the leading role, thus taking her off the young man's hand and clearing the way for him to marry her more attractive young sister; how the "ugly duckling" becomes a veritable fairy princess through the removal of moles and the application of peroxide and how she eventually leaves Grant in the lurch to elope with a tenor—all this is told in a play that runs the gamut of romance, excitement, and clean, rippling fun. It can easily be recommended to every member of the family.

Popular matinees are played on Wednesday and Saturday. Performances begin at 2:30 and 8:30.

Virgil Dryer were house guests in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred E. Blodgett Friday night.

FORD BRAKES ARE UNUSUALLY EFFECTIVE

Reliability and safety due to simple design and careful construction

ONE OF the first things you will notice when you drive the Ford is the quick, effective action of its four-wheel brakes.

They are unusually safe and reliable because they are mechanical, internal expanding, with all braking surfaces fully enclosed. This prevents mud, water, sand, etc., from getting between the band and drum and interfering with brake action.

Other outstanding features of the Ford are the Triplex shatter-proof glass windshield, four Houdaille double-acting hydraulic shock absorbers, aluminum pistons, torque-tube drive, more than twenty ball and roller bearings, Rustless Steel, reliability, economy, and long life.

You save when you buy the Ford and you save every mile you drive.

A STORY OF PRIVATE INITIATIVE AND LOCAL CAPITAL

Chapter I

NORTHERN ILLINOIS • 1911

HOW well can you remember back twenty years? Amundsen was discovering the South Pole. Goethals was gouging the way for the Panama Canal.

Automobilists wore goggles and wrapped themselves up in linen dusters. Flying was a stunt for daredevils.

Electric lights were only for families living in metropolitan centers or in the most up-and-coming outlying communities. In northern Illinois, outside the city limits of Chicago, there were probably 100 towns receiving electricity. Their service was timed by the clock and subject to the whims of the weather. At five in the evening lights were turned on. At eleven o'clock lights blinked a curfew warning—and service was discontinued for the night. Storms cut off service indefinitely.

This was 1911. In August of that year, the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois was organized. Today, in the territory surrounding Chicago there are 318 cities and towns and nearly 7,000 intervening farms receiving gas and electric service twenty-four hours a day.

Two decades have produced this change. Believing that a review of these twenty years will disclose many facts of interest to its customers, the Public Service Company is beginning this series of stories that will appear in these pages from week to week. They will make up a kind of autobiography.

The story of gas and electric service in northern Illinois really begins about five years before the Civil War when the Ottawa Gas Company was founded to manufacture gas for lighting purposes. Its two miles of gas mains served 150 customers. In 1867 a second gas company was granted a charter in Evanston. Later a few others began operations.

Following Thomas A. Edison's invention of the incandescent lamp in 1879—an invention that for the first time made electric light practical for homes—a few scattered local companies were organized to supply electric service of a sort.

Even after twenty years of development this service was very erratic. Progress was restricted not so much by lack of engineering equipment as by lack of money. The local companies were always just a jump ahead of the sheriff. Frequently the sheriff caught up. Machinery for producing electricity was installed in whatever abandoned building could be leased. Usually the company selling the equipment had to share in the financing of the local plant. Managerships changed often. Bankruptcies were numerous. For days at a time service would be interrupted. At the end of the year there was never money left over for improvement of facilities.

Thus was northern Illinois before 1911.

The "Lake County Experiment" which first demonstrated the economies of transmitting electricity produced in a centrally located plant to scattered suburban and rural communities—which was directly responsible for the organization of the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois—is the subject of next week's story.

THE STORY

With his English wife, Catherine, and son, Jeems, Henry Bulain, French settler in Canada in 1749, cultivates a farm adjacent to the Tontour estate. As the story opens the Bulgains are returning from a visit to the Tontours. Catherine's wandering brother, Hepsibah, meets them with presents for the family. To Jeems he gives a pistol, bidding him perfect himself in marksmanship. Hepsibah fears for the safety of the Bulgains in their isolated position. Jeems fights with Paul Tache, cousin of Toinette Tontour, whom they both adore. Next day Jeems calls at the Tontour home and apologizes for brawling in front of Toinette. The Tontours go to Quebec. Four years pass. War between Britain and France flares. Jeems returns from a hunt to find his home burned and his father and mother slain. He goes to the seigneurie and finds the manor destroyed and Tontour and his servants dead.

Against this clouding of his senses he felt himself struggling as if swimming in an empty space. He picked up his hatchet and his bow and rose to his feet. He had not lost sound of the mill wheel even when Toinette's sobbing had seemed to be at his side. It was crying at him now, but before he turned toward it his eyes rested on Tontour's wooden peg. It was half cut off, a mark of grim humor on the part of a butcher. The mill wheel was forcing his attention to that fact. "Look—look—look"—it said, and then repeated the old song, calling him an English beast.

He faced it in a flash of resentment, not because of the wheel alone but on account of what lay at his feet and what he knew he would find nearer to the walls of the manor. His mind was hurling anathema at the wheel. He wanted to tell it that it lied. In this hush of death he wanted to cry out that he was not of the murderous breed who had sent the killers. Proof was over there, in the valley which at last was well named. His mother. His father. His Uncle Hepsibah. Not one of them were dead by its hand. He had been left alive—by chance. That was proof. The wheel was wrong. It lied.

He looked at Tontour again, strengthening himself to go a little farther and find Toinette. He knew how it would be. Toinette's young body, even more pitiful than his mother's. He forced himself to turn toward the smoldering walls. Toinette—dead! His father might die, and Tontour, and all the rest of the world—but these two, his mother and Toinette, inseparable in his soul forever, the vital sparks which had kept his own heart beating—how could they die while he lived? He advanced, pausing over one of the slaves, a woman almost unclothed, inky black except the top of her head, which was red where her scalp was gone. In the crook of her arm was her scapless infant. White, black, women, babies—the loveliness of girlhood—it made no difference.

Jeems scanned the earth beyond her, and where the smoke lay in a white shroud he saw a small, slim figure which he knew was Toinette. Another young body might have lain in the same way, its slenderness crumpled in the same manner, a naked arm revealed dimly under its winding sheet of smoke. But he knew this was Toinette. The dizzying haze wavered before his eyes again, and he put out his hand to hold it back. Toinette. Only a few steps from him. Dead, like his mother.

Odd went ahead of him halfway to the still form and stopped. He sensed something Jeems could not see or feel through the smoke mist which undulated before their eyes. Warning of impending danger confronted the dog, and he tried to pass it to his master. In that moment, a shot came from the mill, and a flash of pain darted through Jeems' arm. He was flung backward and caught himself to hear echoes of the explosion beating against the forested hills and the wheel at the top of the mill screaming at him.

He answered the shot by dropping his bow and dashing toward the mill. Death might easily have met him at the threshold, but nothing moved in the vaultlike chamber he had entered, and there was no sound in it except that of his own breath and his racing heart. Odd went to the flight of narrow steps which led to the tower room and told Jeems that what they sought was there. Jeems ran up, his hatchet raised to strike.

He must have been an unforgettable and terrifying object as he appeared above the floor into the light which forced its way through the dusty glass of three round windows over his head. There must even have been a little of the monster about him. He had left some of his garments with his mother and father, and his arms and shoulders were bare. Char and smoke and the stain of earth had disfigured him. His face appeared to be painted for slaughter and a greenish fire glittered in the eyes that were seeking for an enemy. Blood dripped to the oaken planks from his wounded arm. He was a Frankenstein ready to kill, dishevelment and fury concealing his youth, his stature made appalling by his eagerness to leap at something with the upraised hatchet.

If the hatchet had found a brain, it would have been Toinette's. She faced him as he came, holding the musket which she had fired through a slit in the wall as if she still possessed faith in its power to defend her. Her eyes had in them a touch of madness. Yet she was so straight and tense, waiting for death, that she did not seem to be wholly possessed by fear or terror. Something unconquerable was with her, the soul of Tontour himself struggling in her fragile breast to make her unafraid to die and giving to her an aspect of defiance. This courage could not hide the marks of her torture. Death had miraculously left her flesh untouched in passing, yet she stood crucified in the mill room.

Expecting a savage, she recognized Jeems. The musket fell from her hands to the floor with a dull crash, and she drew back as if retreating from one whose presence she dreaded more than that of a Mohawk, until her form pressed against the piled-up bags of grain, and she was like one at bay. The cry for vengeance which was on Jeems' lips broke in a sobbing breath when he saw her. He spoke her name, and Toinette made no response except that she drew herself more closely to the sacks. Odd's toenails clicked on the wooden floor as he went to her. This did not take her eyes from Jeems. They were twin fires flaming at him through a twilight gloom. The dog touched her hand with his warm tongue, and she snatched it away.

She seemed to grow taller against the gray dusk of the wall of grain. "You—English—beast!"

It was not the mill wheel this time, but Toinette's voice, filled with the madness and passion which blazed from her eyes.

With a sudden movement she picked up the musket and struck at him. It had been loaded, she would have killed him. She continued to strike, but Jeems was conscious only of the words which came from her brokenly as she spent her strength on him. He had come with the English Indians to destroy her people! He and his mother had plotted it, and they were alive while every one who belonged to her was dead! The barrel of the gun struck him across the eyes. It fell against his wounded arm. It bruised his body. Sobbingly, she kept repeating that she wanted to kill him, and cried out wildly for the power with which to accomplish the act as he stood before her like a man of stone. An English beast—her people's murderer—a fiend more terrible than the painted savages.

She struck until the weight of the musket exhausted her and she dropped it. Then she snatched weakly at the hatchet in Jeems' hands, and his fingers relaxed about the helve. With a cry of triumph, she raised it, but before the blow could descend she sank in a crumpled heap upon the floor. Even then her almost unconscious lips were whispering their denunciation.

He knelt beside her and supported her head in his unwounded arm. For a moment it lay against his breast. Her eyes were closed, her lips were still. And Jeems, sick from her blows, remembered his mother's God and breathed a prayer of gratitude because of her deliverance.

Then he bent and kissed the mouth that had cursed him.

CHAPTER VI

Toinette was alone when she awoke from the unconsciousness which had come to ease the anguish of her mind and body. It seemed to her she was coming out of sleep and that the walls which dimly met her eyes were those of her bedroom in the manor. That a truth whose evidence lay so horribly about her could be reality and not a dream broke on her senses dully at first and then with a swift understanding. She sat up expecting to see Jeems. But he was gone. She was no longer where she had fallen at her enemy's feet. But Jeems had made a resting place for her of empty bags and must have carried her to it. She shivered when she looked at the musket and the stain of blood on the floor. She had tried to kill him. And he had gone away, leaving her alive!

As had happened to Jeems, something was burned out of her now. It had gone in the sea of darkness which had swept over her, and she rose with an unemotional calmness, as if the tower room with its dust and cobwebs and store of ripened grain had become her cloister. Passion had worn itself away. If a thought could have slain, she would still have wreaked her vengeance on Jeems, but she would not have touched the musket again that lay on the floor.

She went to the head of the stairs and looked down. The son of the English woman had left no sign except the drip of blood that made a trail on the steps and out of the door. Exultation possessed her as she thought how nearly she had brought to the Bulgains the same shadow of death which they and their kind had brought to her. The thrill was gone in a moment. The red drops fascinated her, painted brightly by the sun. Jeems Bulain—out there with her dead! The boy her mother had tried to make her regard with bitterness and dislike from childhood—a man grown into an English monster! She struggled to bring back her power to hate and her desire to kill, but the effort she made was futile. She followed the crimson stains.

All about her was the haze of smoke, soft and still in the air. In the distance, obscured by the fog which ran from the smoldering ruins, she saw a form bent grotesquely under a burden. It was a shapeless thing, distorted by the sun and the smoky spindrifts dancing before her eyes, but living because it was moving away from her. Behind it was a smaller object, and she knew the two were Jeems and his dog.

She watched until they were blotted from her vision, and minutes passed before she followed where they had gone.

Jeems must have seen her, for he appeared with the dog like a were-wolf at his heels. He had found a coat somewhere and did not look so savage, though his face was disfigured and bleeding where she had struck him with the barrel of the musket. She tried to speak when he stopped before her. Accusation and a bit of ferocity remained in her soul, but they were impotent in the silence between them. His eyes meeting hers steadily from under the lurid brand of her blow, seemed less like a murderer's and held more the gaze of one who regarded her with a cold and terrible pity. He did not put out a helping hand though she felt herself swaying. He was no longer youth. He was not even Jeems Bulain.

But his voice was the same. "I am sorry, Toinette."

Specialists Seeking to Extend Use of Honey

Ancient literature, telling of the adaptions of honey to suit the varying tastes and needs of past centuries, provides clues which scientists are now following to revive old uses and to develop the present possibilities of the product.

The early Romans in their writings often mentioned the honeybee and honey. Among the products they mentioned frequently are water honey, salt-water honey, water mead, rose honey, honey foam, and honey vinegar.

The United States Department of Agriculture is studying the chemical properties of honey and methods of inducing chemical changes in it that will open the field for new honey products. Specialists are perfecting methods of making honey candy, and some manufacturers already have secret processes for making this confection. Many housekeepers now use honey to sweeten beverages, cereals, and cakes and generally in cooking. It is also used as a sirup on waffles and hot cakes. Eminent physicians proclaim that honey contains the most beneficial of the sugars.

Chinese Lipstick in 1730

Among the Chinese paintings on glass recently shown in a London gallery was that of a Chinese young woman at her toilet in a well-to-do home. Although the date of this picture is about 1730, the miss was using a lipstick with all the skill of a modern flapper.

The KITCHEN CABINET

(© 1931, Western Newspaper Union.)

There is no moment like the present. The man who will not execute his resolutions when they are fresh upon him can have no hope from them; afterwards they will be dissipated, lost, and perish in the hurry and scurry of the world, or sunk in the slough of indolence.—Maria Edgeworth.

THIS AND THAT

A piece of home-made candy is always a welcome addition to any meal.

Date Nut Roll.

Boil one cupful of evaporated milk with two and one-half cupfuls of sugar to the soft ball stage. Add one package of dates, sliced and stir well.

Into the mixture, cooking for a few minutes; now add two cupfuls of nuts chopped. Cool, turn out on a buttered platter and knead until creamy and stiff. Shape neatly into a roll, wrap in a damp cloth, place in a covered container and keep cold until ready to slice.

Maple Fudge.—Boil together one cupful each of granulated sugar and maple sugar, one tablespoonful of corn sirup, a few grains of salt, one-half cupful of water and when the mixture is a thick sirup add one-half cupful of evaporated milk. Stir and cook until it tests for the soft ball. Let stand to cool. When the candy is cool enough to hold the hand on the bottom of the pan, it is ready to stir. At the first sign of stiffening turn into a buttered pan; it will be smooth and glossy; when cool enough cut into squares.

Pratines.—Boil together one-half cupful of cream, one and seven-eighths cupfuls of powdered sugar and one cupful of maple sirup. When tried in cold water and a soft ball is formed remove and heat until creamy, adding two cupfuls of pecan meats, drop from a teaspoon on a buttered paper or pour into small gem pans.

Chocolate Filling.—Melt four squares of chocolate; add to two well beaten yolks of eggs one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, one-half cupful of milk and one tablespoonful of butter. Cook, stirring constantly and boil for one minute, remove from the fire, add the melted chocolate and a teaspoonful of vanilla; beat until thick. Add chopped, seedless raisins and nuts, if desired. This makes an icing which will remain soft and has a beautiful gloss.

Eighth Wonder of the World

Milan, the capital of Lombardy, is unquestionably the industrial metropolis of the country and essentially the sign and symbol of the new Italy. Indeed, there are few cities in Europe where the spirit of the Twentieth century is more firmly enthroned; yet it still radiates the atmosphere of a brilliant and glowing past and many great and ancient buildings remain to bear witness to the golden age of art. The marvelous cathedral of white marble is the eighth wonder of the world. Five centuries of effort and the genius of a whole series of gifted architects have gone into its making. The great edifice was begun in 1386 and reached its present form due to the generosity of Napoleon. The cathedral is a veritable architectural encyclopedia, a product of all the ages.

Authors and the Bible

A list of authors whose work shows the influence of the Bible would be endless, but we cite a few examples: Coleridge said, "Intense study of the Bible will keep any man from being vulgar in point of style." Daniel Webster said, "If there be anything in my style or thought to be commended, the credit is due to my kind parents in instilling into my mind an early love of the Scriptures." A Scotch nurse taught Byron to love the Bible and his "Hebrew Melodies" are drawn wholly from the Scriptures. In Robert Burns' "The Cotter's Saturday Night" there are some 20 Biblical references.—Washington Star.

Old Stage Favorite

The theatrical career of "East Lynne" dates back to March 23, 1863, when it was performed at a New York theater, Tripler's hall. Clifton W. Taylure, a Brooklyn playwright, prepared what was probably the first dramatic adaptation. Lucile Western was the first actress to play the role of Lady Isabel.

Earth and Moon

The length of the earth's axis is about 7,900 miles, while the diameter of the moon is about 2,160 miles. The earth's surface is about 13½ times as great as the moon's; its volume or bulk is nearly 50 times larger; and, owing to its greater density, the mass or actual amount of matter contained in the earth is about 81 times greater than that of the moon.

Great Pyramids' Stone

The Egyptian pyramids were built of a hard, rough-hewn limestone, but large blocks of granite were also used, especially on the outside. The stone was taken from quarries in the cliffs which line the Nile valley in its lower reaches.

Human Ear's Limitation

The human ear is formed to receive only certain sounds and the highest sounds we can hear are those of 70,000 air vibrations to the second.

Referring to their lack of artillery in the beginning, General Birch said there was reason to believe that they had finally attained a superiority over the Germans.

Real Teamwork Lacking.

Sir Douglas told me some of the details of Nivelle's unsuccessful attack in the spring, how it was known far and wide, beforehand and spoke particularly of the consequent serious disaffection among the French troops. Although he had placed himself under Nivelle's command for these operations, he had, he said, little confidence in the outcome from the start. He also commented on the failure of the French to co-operate fully on various occasions. His remarks entirely confirmed the belief that I had long since held that real teamwork between the two armies was almost totally absent.

Scarcely anything more strikingly impressed upon me our unpreparedness than what I saw during a few hours spent with General Trenchard at the British flying field, where we witnessed flyers doing every imaginable stunt, and saw planes of all classes, bombing, pursuit and observation, motors of different types and the thoroughly equipped repair shops.

The outstanding thing, however, which it was gratifying to note later on in our own aviation personnel, was the incomparable spirit and alertness of the young officers and the enlisted personnel. Every man seemed to be disappointed when a flight of planes departed from the front without him.

This visit to British headquarters was most instructive, as every opportunity was given us to study intimately the details of their wartime organization. After similar studies of the French system we selected from each those features best suited to perfect a well-balanced staff for our own army.

The cordial relations and good understanding established between Sir Douglas Haig and myself and between the corresponding members of our staffs and with a number of the leading British officers with whom we were later to have official dealings proved very advantageous. In London, long after the armistice, Sir Douglas, in an after-dinner speech, referred to this visit, which happened during a period of depression, and said that our timely appearance at his headquarters had aroused in them a strong feeling of hopefulness for the future.

Meets Other Leaders.

My diary at this time notes the following:

Paris, Thursday, July 26, 1917.

Had breakfast yesterday at the Crillon with Lloyd George. He is alert and energetic and has a clear conception of allied problems. Took lunch with Mr. Balfour, who thinks we have reason to feel easier regarding submarines. Representatives of the various allies met for conference on general situation. In the evening M. Ribot, the prime minister, gave a state dinner to officials attending conference.

Today attended luncheon to allied representatives given by the President and Mme. Poincaré at the Elysee palace.

In conference this afternoon with Petain, Cadorna, Robertson and Foch at latter's office. Discussed military plans, talked about tonnage possibilities and shortage of personnel. All pessimistic and reserved.

James Stillman, just returned from a tour of France, confirms reports of serious depression.

Situation Not Hopeful.

The meeting of the allied military leaders July 26, which was my first, brought out little that was hopeful. The political relations of the allies were touched upon in a general way, but only so far as they might affect the military situation. The most significant recent event, of course, had been the crisis in Russia.

With reference to American assistance, I gave in detail the situation as to our man power, immediate and prospect, especially in the light of the latest plans of the department, and laid particular emphasis on the necessity of additional shipping. A cablegram had just been received in response to mine of July 6 in which I had requested that at least a million men reach France by the following spring.

This message, indicating that the War department foresaw small chance of securing the necessary tonnage, was read to the conference in part as follows:

"By using all shipping which is now in sight for the purpose and which will be available after month of November, the plan proposes to transport to France by June 15, 1918, twenty-one divisions, comprising about 420,000 men, together with auxiliary troops and replacement troops, line of communication troops, and others, amounting to 214,970 men, making a total of 634,970 men."

More Tonnage Needed.

Although short of my recommendations, even this schedule could be carried out only by a very large increase of tonnage. The other members of the conference were of the opinion that if new adjustments could be made there might be shipping for nine or ten of our divisions before spring. So for the moment there did not seem to be the slightest chance of transporting a million men to France by the following June.

After canvassing the whole situation, the conference expressed the unanimous opinion that a defensive role should be adopted on all secondary fronts. The British and French representatives hoped that the surplus troops resulting from this course might be available to strengthen their armies in France and General Cadorna, of course, thought the Italian armies should have their share.

CHAPTER X

About this time (July, 1917) disturbing reports were submitted to me confidentially by one of our naval officers sent by Admiral Sims from London. Calculations based upon tonnage losses for May, June and July seemed to confirm the conclusions of a month previous that there would soon be insufficient allied shipping left to bring over an American army of required strength, and that the allies would find it difficult to keep up their food supply from overseas.

The data presented by the naval officer proved that if this rate of destruction could not be reduced the war would be lost before we could fire a shot.

This report was certainly most pessimistic, but it did not dispel my confidence in the success of the plan that had been tested and was about to be inaugurated of sending ships over in convoys under the protection of naval vessels. Additional destroyers requested by Admiral Sims had by this

One message intercepted by the French, sent from some wireless station in Spain to the German general staff, announced the arrival of several American vessels at Nantes and of 10,000 American soldiers at St. Nazaire, and also gave the routes taken by our transports.

Another, evidently intended for submarines, reported the departure of a convoy of transports from New York. These and similar facts were cabled at once to Admiral Sims and to Washington.

Leadership Big Problem.

Probably the most important factor in building up an aggressive army is the selection of leaders. Without sufficient leadership the finest of troops may suffer defeat by inferior forces skillfully led.

The following was my recommendation to Secretary of War Baker:

"My observation of British and French armies and most exacting arduous service conditions at the front fully convince me that only officers in full mental and physical vigor should be sent here. Contrary course means certain inefficiency in our service and possible later humiliation of officers concerned. General officers must undergo extreme effort in personal supervision of operations in trenches. Very few British or French division commanders over forty-five or brigadiers over forty."

"We have too much at stake to risk inefficiency through mental or physical defects. Strongly recommend conditions be fully considered in making high appointments and suggest that no officer of whatever rank be sent here for active service who is not strong and robust in every particular. Officers selected for appointment general officer of line should be those with experience in actively command-time largely increased such craft in European waters, and as a result the activities of submarines had been somewhat diminished for July as compared with April.

Need of Speed Evident.

Yet for the time being ship construction in British yards continued below losses and our shipping board at home had scarcely stopped wrangling over materials and types. All these facts caused everybody to realize the extreme urgency of speed, and that in turn gave some hope that the prospects might soon become brighter.

It was my belief, even in the face of the heavy losses, that with complete co-operation under expert management and distribution, the shipping would be ample for all purposes. This would require, of course, that it be placed under some central authority, but the governments, especially the British, that controlled most of it, while apparently desirous of helping, did not seem inclined to think they could make any concessions. They had entered into arrangements to assist each other with shipping for foodstuffs, but there was no such thing as pooling of allied tonnage for general purposes.

However, the discouraging reports on the situation did make such an impression on the military leaders that they suggested the possibility of pooling all available shipping and accordingly recommended a commission to consider the question, with especial reference to the transportation of the American army.

Spies Get Sailing Dates.

The success of submarine warfare had been largely dependent upon advance knowledge concerning movements of vessels. As there was no doubt that the sailing dates of much of our shipping reached Germany through spies, one way to reduce the danger would be to close such sources of information.

In the beginning the practice by our War department of transmitting secret information was extremely loose. The data regarding sailing was, of course, sent to my headquarters, but at the same time, or often before, it was also given to both French and British military and naval attaches and missions in Washington. They immediately transmitted the information by cable to their respective governments, with the result that it usually became almost common knowledge.

But there were other sources of information possessed by the enemy.

ing troops. Officers not fulfilling above conditions can be usefully employed at home training troops."

Little Effort at Selection.

These recommendations were not altogether followed at home. In fact very little effort seems to have been made at selection, so that some officers without ambition or initiative, whose inefficiency should have been well known, and others whose age and physical condition were such as to disqualify them for strenuous service, were given important assignments.

Most of them were known to me and not a few who, under the rule of seniority, were commanders of regiments and departments, had lacked the energy even to train their commands or themselves in battle exercises, where favorable opportunity had been offered.

The policy of the War department from beginning to end seemed to be to appoint officers to the higher grade, according to seniority, with the intention of weeding out the inefficient later on. This appears to have been the department's idea of selection and the result was practically no selection at all. After the appointment of such officers it was a slow process to eliminate them.

In the Training Area.

The First division was now well settled in its training area in the region of Gondrecourt, south of Bar-le-Duc. The troops of the division had already established friendly relations with the French peasantry and had quickly adapted themselves to their new mode of life.

As the natural consequence of the financial condition of the frugal French provincial, he was wont to profit by the presence of the British and ourselves, and the open-handed pay-day habits of the Americans served to give some encouragement to this inclination. As a result some coolness grew up later between our men and their early friends.

In all history I do not believe there has ever been an army on foreign soil so considerate and observant of the rights and interests of the people. The peasant class made a strong appeal to every man in the army. Their simplicity, their love of the soil and the long hours of work in the fields by the old men and women and young boys and girls remained the constant admiration of our soldiers.

I am inclined to think, however, that the excellent behavior of the men in the first contingent, their rather unmilitary appearance in ill-fitting uniforms and their apparent lack of formal discipline created the impression in the minds of the French officials that they were too kind-hearted to become aggressive fighting troops.

At the conclusion of my inspection of various places Chaumont was selected as the best site for our general headquarters. It was on our line of communications to the front and centrally placed as to probable sectors of our operations. The fine stone regimental barracks became our headquarters and we were able to obtain ample billeting accommodations in houses for all except the enlisted men, who were provided with temporary barracks.

CHAPTER XI

In the organization of our armies for the World War it was evident that if any considerable numbers were to be sent abroad an additional force would be needed over and above the regular army and the National Guard.

The War department therefore established what was called the national army, to be composed principally of men who were to come into service through the draft. Most of the divisions of the national army were organized in August and September, 1917. As the time approached to begin the training of the smaller units it was found that after equipping the special troops urgently needed in France there was little equipment left even for the additional men required to fill up the National Guard.

Unfortunately, this made it necessary to delay calling out men for the units of the national army. However, considerable numbers were called into service and proceeded with preliminary instruction, but the lack of equipment seriously delayed their progress.

Visiting Billeting Areas.

My diary notes the following:

Paris, Tuesday, August 21, 1917.

Visited billeting areas of Forty-seventh French and our First division with General Petain on Sunday.

Inspected St. Dizier regulating station and witnessed attack near Verdun yesterday. Visited French hospital at Souilly.

Returned this morning with M. Painleve, minister of war, on his train.

As I had accepted General Petain's invitation to see the French offensive that was to take place August 20, I motored to French general headquarters on the 18th, accompanied by Colonel Palmer and Captain Boyd, and after dinner left with General Petain and two or three members of his staff on his train for an inspection of French and American troops the following day. We reached Gondrecourt the next morning and began the day with a review of the French Forty-seventh infantry division, which was paraded on a prominent plateau near Houdelaineourt.

This division had been in every serious engagement of the war and its losses had been very heavy, as could be easily surmised from the youthful appearance of the officers, most of whom had risen from the ranks to replace casualties among their seniors. General Petain told them that because of its fine record the division had been given the special honor of assisting in the instruction of the American First division.

Visit Our Troops in Training.

Accompanied by Brigadier General Bundy, Colonel Cruikshank and others, I took General Petain to see some of our troops being trained in throwing grenades and in the use of the French automatic rifle. An amusing story was told us in connection with grenade instruction. One of the men insisted on throwing his grenade immediately after setting the fuse instead of waiting till he slowly counted seven, which was necessary so the explosion would occur as the grenade reached its destination.

After being cautioned several times by his officer the man said: "Captain, I just can't hold these grenades any longer because I can feel them swelling in my hand."

We visited several villages occupied by French and American troops. As we passed through our billets and inspected the kitchens, Petain particularly inquired about the components of our ration and the manner of cooking and serving meals. The French soldiers were furnished wine in place of coffee provided for our men and the allowances differed in other respects, ours containing a larger meat component. But when it came to cooking the French were ahead of us, although our men preferred our own food to either the French or British ration.

Wounded Nurse Decorated.

Motoring to Souilly, the headquarters of the French Second army, we met Major General Fayolle, commanding the group of armies of the center, and Major General Guillaumat, commander of the Second army, whose chief of staff explained in detail the plan of the battle that was to take place next day. We had luncheon with General Fayolle, whom later I came to regard as one of the ablest of the French generals. In appearance he was rather frail, no longer young, but active and alert.

On our visit to the military hospital at Souilly General Petain decorated Mlle. de Baye, a nurse, with the croix de guerre, as she lay on a cot suffering from a severe wound inflicted by a piece of shell two days before. When he told her who I was she said: "I am glad you are here, general, to see how a French woman can suffer for her country." She was so happy, however, that I am sure that for the moment she had entirely forgotten her pain.

Ancient Burial Places

Uncovered in Bavaria

A settlement dating from about 800 B. C. has been found near Osterhofen, Lower Bavaria. Excavations have turned up vessels of various kinds, urns, ceramics painted red, and a millstone. Cave dwellings from the Neolithic age were also found nearby. Near Darmitz, not far from Erlangen, an urn burial place dating from the Late Bronze age is being uncovered. An accident has further led to the discovery of finds from the Roman period near Gunzburg on the Danube. Men digging a ditch came upon a Roman grave some five feet down, and a man's skeleton lay nearby. The finds include a bronze coin bearing the head of Vespasian with crown, and the inscription, "Imp. Caes. Vespasian. Aug. III."

Below the great temple which Nebuchadnezzar built at Kish, the 12-foot thick walls of another huge temple have been discovered. Kish, said to be the oldest city in the world, is in Iraq, eight miles east of Babylon, and the Oxford University-Field museum's expedition has been working on the site for several seasons.

Quick COMFORT for fretful upset children

ALL children are subject to little upsets. They come at unexpected times. They seem twice as serious in the dead of night. But there's one form of comfort on which a mother can always rely; good old Castoria. This pure vegetable preparation can't harm the tiniest infant. Yet mild as it is, it soothes a restless, fretful baby like nothing else. Its quick relief soon sees the youngster comfortable once more, back to sleep. Even an attack of colic, or diarrhea, yields to the soothing influence of Castoria.

Keep Castoria in mind, and keep a bottle in the house—always. Give it to any child whose tongue is coated, or whose breath is bad. Continue with Castoria until the child is grown!

World's Greatest Poets

Will Durant, greatly daring, has essayed to name the greatest poets of all time. His list, published in the American Magazine, will probably suit nobody except Mr. Durant. It includes:

Homer, David, Euripides, Lucretius, Li Yai-po, Dante, Shakespeare, Keats, Shelley and Whitman.

England gets three representatives to America's one. The nominee from China, probably unknown heretofore to more than one American in a thousand, is described by Mr. Durant as a precocious literary producer belonging to the Tang dynasty, born in 701. "There were 2,300 poets in that Tang dynasty," Mr. Durant informs his readers, "and of them all Yai-po was accounted best. A billion Chinamen have sung and loved his poems."

Mrs. Alice Anderson was next introduced as she is serving as program chairman to her we owe all our good times and pleasant surprises. Mrs. Hilgendorf was in Indiana.

She is Mrs. Anderson's mother. Mrs. Clarence Goessel was next introduced and she in turn introduced her mother, Mrs. Henry Kehres.

Mrs. Goessel is a wonderful helper, not only assisting the little sec. with her work but lends a hand at all times.

Last of all it was indeed a pleasure to introduce Mrs. Lulu Rogers Auntie Larkspur, as she is known, and to her a big responsibility has been placed as our over seer of all gardens.

The Jr. club was delighted to have as another out of town guest Mrs. Wm. Semmler and her young daughter Ada.

Mrs. Semmler favored the Junior Buds and mothers with her expression of delight.

Mrs. Hug next presented a page to each of the Bud's for her memory book, and in return asked the Buds to please prepare a page for her.

The meeting was next turned over to Miss Edna Goessel and the regular business finished as quickly as possible.

Letters of thanks were read from Mrs. Wm. Funk and Julian Reiter. The afternoon was then turned over to Mrs. Alice Anderson.

The following was the lovely program Group of Buds sang "The Flower Song". Next was a lovely flower dialogue. Marguerite Lorenz had the leading role.

Piano solo by Coretta Siemsen Reading by Patricia Bagby Piano Solo by Irma Hick Reading by Fern Fulton Piano Solo by Betty Henderson Story by Edith Matilzki Piano Solo by Marian Moss Reading by Shirely Anderson Piano Solo by June Devol Piano Solo by Cassie Hirsch

Violet song was next by all the Buds and dainty little Miss Velma Lorenz was introduced as the clubs' emblem and a most charming little "Violet" she was.

Mrs. Clarence Goessel made the Violet costume as a big surprise to all.

Each bud was then handed her "Jonquils" for her Mother and finished this delightful program by singing the beautiful song "Mother".

The buds lead by the little Violet carrying a huge basket stepped to the strains of a march played by Mrs. Alice Anderson.

She delivered a bouquet to all the guests and to the four sponsors. Mrs. Florence Anderson presented Mrs. R. J. Hug with a beautiful gift, a pot of Jonquils and Iris.

Next words of appreciation were given by Mrs. Bagby and Mrs. Bert Fulton. A beautiful poem was read by Mrs. Edmond Moss.

Refreshments were served. Then came to a close the end of a beautiful May Day and Mothers Day program.
